CONGRESSIONAL RESURE. The proceedings of the senate were mostly taken up in the discussion of the The Annual Picute at the Expesition form of government for the District of Columbia. Several amendments were offered to the bill passed by the house, after which the bill, as amended, passed, with but one negative vote. In the house, Mr. Butler [Mass.] attempted to call up the civil rights bill, but failed, Mr. Mills moved to suspend the rules, and pass a bill for the removal of troops from the southern States, and placing them on the Texas frontier, to protect that settlement from the Indians. The house couldn't see it. Mr. Poland made the procession were Chief-of-Police

At the close of the valedictory, Mr. Ward made a short address, in the course of which he said that it had been nine years since the seminary had been of pleasing duty. In every department the pupils had done their part nobly and well. There had been no sickness in the school during the year. The pupils, he add, would now go forth into a future bright and cheerful, with heart and force of will, and determination to do still more, if possible, for the cause of chucation. Their course had just begun. That was commencement day. The day for preparation had passed, and how they would go out to tread the rural pathway of life. With that class, he said, he had turned out in the nine years past three hundred and twenty-six graduates. They were all over the land, engaged in household duties, in school during shedding light and beauty wherever they have gone. Some were of the suffering popple of the said, he had turned out in the nine of the said, he had turned out in the nine of the said, he had turned out in the nine of the said, he had turned out in the nine of the said, he had turned out in the nine of the said, he had turned out in the nine of the said had the said had been with him so long the receiction as geverner.
